Have your say in shaping Canada's built environment.

Through the Rise for Architecture initiative, the architectural profession in Canada is engaging with all those who are charged with designing a safe, healthy and uplifting built environment that protects and nurtures the public and the planet. The built environment has a powerful impact on society at every level – physically, spiritually, socially, culturally, economically and more. Join this national public conversation and take part in our effort to foster a shared awareness of the value of quality planning and development and its benefit to society, and the importance of taking appropriate actions to support these goals.

Our commitment to those who participate is to listen and integrate your concerns into a final vision statement that calls on all involved in shaping the built environment, from professionals to public bodies and governments, to collaboratively develop policies and calls to action that will ensure healthy and strong communities for all Canadians.
